The Internet has been around since 1983 as the Internet and since 1969 as ARPAnet. After all these years of existence it has become an engine for commerce and social evolution. Because it is such a powerful platform for commercial activity, there are many interests thinking about owning and controlling it. How do we keep the Internet “free” and open for all in a way that’s beneficial for all interests and especially for all users everywhere? This is our focus for this year’s OneWebDay.

Join us for an evening of complimentary hors d'oeuvres, beer and compelling talks by Jon Lebkowsky, strategist, social commentator and well-respected Internet pioneer addressing The Internet Then and Now, Carl Settles speaking on Media, Mentoring and Technology in the Classroom, Gregory Foster, Web Developer for Consumers Union presenting Online Activism and Government 2.0 and a stellar panel on The End Of Free and Unfettered Internet Access: How Network Operators Are Restricting Internet Use featuring Moderator Jon Lebkowsky, Attorney Matt Henry of McCullough | Henry, PC and Computer Network Consultant and Founder of Pico Innovations, Michael Hathaway.

OneWebDay was founded in 2006 as an all volunteer campaign to build an active community of Internet advocates in the United States and around the world. Originally imagined as a celebration of the World Wide Web – the services and content the Internet carries – OneWebDay has grown into a movement of organizations, citizens and consumers who are committed to universal and equal access to the Internet. OneWebDay takes place annually on September 22. This year’s theme is “One Web. For All” and focuses on volunteer service and expanding opportunity.
